House takes its first step in mental health reform

By Brian Bowden
associate legislative director

On July 6, the House voted 422–2 to approve a long-stalled bill that attempts to overhaul the nation’s mental health system. Rep. Tim Murphy (R-Pa.), a clinical psychologist, has been working on the bill — Helping Families in Mental Health Crisis Act (H.R. 2646) — since the Newtown, Conn. shooting in December 2012.

The overwhelming bipartisan support for this bill comes after intense negotiations and multiple iterations leading to a much scaled-back product.

In a letter to House leadership, NACo supported H.R. 2646 but

June’s flash floods devastate hilly West Virginia counties

By Charlie Ban
senior staff writer

Before he rejoined the search for a Greenbrier County resident who had been missing for nearly two weeks since flash floods in West Virginia, Sheriff Jan Cahill acknowledged that things could have been even worse for the Mountain State.

It’s hard to believe, with 23 confirmed dead, one missing and hundreds of homes destroyed, mainly in the southeastern part of the state: destruction warranting presidential disaster declarations for Greenbrier, Kanawha and Nicholas counties.

“If this had happened at 3 or 4 in the morning, we would have seen more than 100 people die,” Cahill said. “People were up and about and they knew it was coming, even though they didn’t know how bad it would be.”

More than eight inches of rain fell the afternoon of June 22, after steady rain all day and most of the prior few weeks. The ground was saturated and there was nowhere for the water to go but up.

NACo launches Solutions for Savings National Leadership Award

In celebration of the 20th year of U.S. Communities, NACo has established a new national award for counties.

This award is designed to recognize counties that use NACo’s U.S. Communities purchasing program in creative ways to save taxpayer money and enhance the safety, health or overall well-being of citizens.

NACo will choose the first winner of the annual Solutions for Savings National Leadership Award by the end of November, and the award will go to the county that best shows how they are doing more with less taxpayer funds.

To enter, counties must create an informal, one-to-two-minute video to show their project or money-saving success story by Nov. 15. The winning county will achieve national recognition, an award plaque for permanent display and $1,000.

“This is a fantastic opportunity for NACo members to help other counties by sharing their purchasing success stories,” said NACo First Vice President Bryan Desloge. “We want counties that demonstrate innovative solutions for savings to gain the national recognition they deserve.”

Some hope flood was a 1,000-year event

At 3:40 p.m., it was visible, but didn’t appear threatening. Forty minutes later, the roads leading to the Young’s house in Clendenin were flooded but she drove through them anyway until a fallen tree stopped her. She told Ava, whose cell phone battery was down to 12 percent before the flooding started, to get to a nearby relative’s house, which she and her 15-year-old dog did with the aid of a passer-by. She spent the next day caring for 9- and 11-year-old relatives until being rescued by Young’s son.

“We lived in that house for 13 years, but we’re lucky,” Young said. “My daughter is safe, and we have a place to stay. We can replace things. My work family has been supportive, but it’s hard to think about the people who aren’t as fortunate, who don’t have places to stay and don’t know when things will change.”

Young doesn’t plan to return to Clendenin, a small town in rural Kanawha County. Her decision is one being agonized over by many, and may change the faces of some of these counties.

In Greenbrier County, Cahill said, “Some of [the towns] were on the ropes before the flood. I’m not sure if people will be coming back. Some might not even be able to rebuild in the same places.”

Jennifer Sayre, the Kanawha County manager, said Clendenin, though pretty flat, had water reaching 13 feet. The hilly topography compounded the saturating rainfall. Six people died in Kanawha County.

“The amount of water in some of these homes was unimaginable,” she said. “People were trapped on the second floor waiting for the water to recede.

“I’ve worked for the county for 16 years and I’ve never seen anything like it.”

Even the county ambulance authority station in Clendenin was completely flooded.

Cahill got the same reaction from residents in their 80s and 90s.

“They talk about the floods in 1985 and 1972, but this seemed the most dramatic to them,” he said. “They talk about 50-year floods and 100-year floods. I hope this was one of the 1,000-year floods.”

He was on the road when the rain got heavy.

“It’s like when you’re in your car in an automatic car wash, only five times more intense,” he said. “There was no visibility. I have never seen anything as intense or prolonged.”

Patti Hamilton, the executive director of the state association, was also on the road from the Cاناan Valley when the rain started.

“It was just a torrential downpour for basically two-and-a-half hours,” she said. “I thought the storm was following me.”

She nearly stopped in a shopping center close to home that ended up being cut off from the road when its culvert bridges collapsed.

“Young’s town, Clendenin, is one of several that some worry won’t be making a comeback. Now, the region will try to rebuild. Kanawha County has finished the emergency portion and has moved onto recovery. The most populous county in the state saw more than 1,500 families displaced.

In addition to helping residents work with FEMA, the county has been organizing debris cleanup, volunteers and coordinating drop-off sites and pickups, spending $600,000 from its emergency fund.

The County Commission waived building permit fees in affected areas.

Greenbrier County’s recovery hinges on the famous Greenbrier Hotel’s operation, not just as a magnet for outside income but because it is one of the largest employers.

The Greenbrier Classic golf tournament, scheduled to start 11 days after the flood, was cancelled, which, while sensible, put a hurt on residents who looked forward to part-time work.

The hotel has played host to displaced families for free, but now it has to get back into business.

“So many people work at the hotel, at the restaurants,” Cahill said. “They’re as worried about their jobs as they are their homes.”

Right now he’s worried about recovering the missing teenager to bring closure to her family, but he also fears there may be more casualties they haven’t found yet.

“We have been using airboats, cadaver dogs, drones, diving teams, people on foot — everything you can think of to search,” Cahill said.

Federal parity requirements strengthened reiterated that it is just a “first step in mental health reform.” The budget-neutral measure creates a new assistant secretary position at the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to focus exclusively on mental health and substance abuse issues. It authorizes grant programs for community mental health centers and reauthorizes existing programs at the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA), including the Community Mental Health Services and Substance Abuse Prevention and Treatment Block Grants.

H.R. 2646 does not make significant changes to the Health Insurance and Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA), but directs HHS to issue rules to clarify what information is allowed to be shared with family and caregivers under the existing law. The bill also adds requirements to strengthen federal parity law that requires insurers to cover mental health care in the same way they cover physical illnesses.

It also allows for billing of health, mental health, and substance abuse services provided on the same day in the same facility. Currently, Medicaid restricts same-day billing. Consequently, patients need to schedule appointments over different days. This prohibition poses a significant barrier for agencies wanting to integrate behavioral health into the primary-care environment.

Notably the slimmed-down bipartisan bill does not include

For some counties, the ‘code’ word is amnesty

By Charles Taylor
senior staff writer

County building code enforcement officials say it’s about safety, not about the money. That’s the rationale that drives building code or permit amnesty programs.

Making the community a safer place, said Dennis Hansburg, director of planning and land services for Pierce County, Wash., sometimes gets “lost in the messaging” promoting such programs. “At the end of the whole thing, this came down to life safety issues.”

Faulty installations can cause fires, flood damage and other hazards, according to Clark County, Nev. building and fire prevention officials. Work without permits also may not be covered by insurance, and homeowners can face costly repairs when trying to sell their homes if work was done without permits.

The mechanics vary among various county permit amnesty programs across the country. But typically code enforcement will waive fines and penalties for amnesty participants, provided they obtain and pay for their permit and correct any violations.

“We’re looking for compliance on the property before we can offer this program,” said Chaveli Moreno, director of Miami-Dade’s homeless Mitigation Division. “So violations must be remedied before being accepted into the program. The county’s code amnesty has been in place since 2009 and is for renewal this month. It applies to work performed without permits or on expired permits.

From August 2011 through May 2016, more than 2,600 residents of unincorporated Miami-Dade took advantage of the program. Almost half of the county’s population of 2 million live outside its cities. The program is open only to primary owners of residential properties but not commercial or industrial owners, or financial institutions.

To determine the amount of foregone revenue, Moreno’s division first looks at what the outstanding civil penalties and liens owed would be. She estimates that, as a result of the amnesty, the county has missed out on about $4 million in penalties since the program began.

Residents are ineligible for code relief if the county has begun a civil action to collect on the civil penalties or to foreclose a lien.

As with Miami-Dade, the code relief program in Pierce County also applies to its unincorporated areas.

Pierce County’s program differs in that it’s not strictly voluntary. Homeowners found by inspectors to have done work without permits are also offered amnesty. Planning director Hansburg said aerial photography is used to identify structures that weren’t visible on previous overflights.

“With that done, notices were sent out to those properties saying, ‘We’ve noticed that there’s something here; we have an amnesty program.’ But that doesn’t always work: ‘We have one that’s a 3,500-square-feet house with a garage, and we can see it form the air but we can’t see it from the ground. So while we’ve submitted notices, he’s been unresponsive.’

Pierce County’s program began in 2010, and Hansburg said during the housing boom that preceded the bust, “a lot of stuff was built.” The permitting office could barely keep up with the demand. “I think there were some backups at the county permit line, so people started saying I’m just going to build it anyway.”

In Nevada, Clark County’s most recent amnesty was May 2 through 31 of this year, coinciding with the International Code Council’s Building Safety Month.

Homeowners were subject to paying normal fees for permits, inspections and plan reviews, but not penalties. Fees for residential-related construction range from $150 to $400, depending on the project, county officials said.

One might think that such programs irked folks who followed the rules and obtained permits beforehand. If they are, they haven’t been vocal about it, all three building officials say. However, some scofflaws do get ratted out by their neighbors.

Hansburg said the return on investment is “small,” but during the program’s three years, it generated a lot of buzz.

“Some people were not aware they needed to permit a certain thing. We got a lot of calls at the time. In Washington, there are things you can do without a permit, so we had a ton of inquiries.”

Don’t miss the chance to go ‘mobile’ at Annual

We’re just days away from the National Association of Counties Annual Conference & Exposition in Los Angeles County (Long Beach). As you plan your participation in the many activities and sessions, I wanted to highlight a few things for you to consider making part of your conference experience.

In addition to the on-site sessions, take the opportunity to get out in the field to learn about issues from sustainability to project finance to veterans’ services with these five mobile tours:

- The Growing Experience
  Urban Farm — Healthy produce production and education and skills training opportunities for underserved youth and young adults.
  Thursday, Jul. 21, 2– 4 p.m.
- THUMS Island Tour — Environmentally-conscious offshore oil production.
  Thursday, Jul. 21, 2– 4 p.m.
- The Long Beach Courthouse — A public-private partnership for building construction and operation.
  Thursday, Jul. 21, 2– 4 p.m.
- Bob Hope Patriotic Hall — A panel discussion on services at the veterans facility plus a museum tour.
  Thursday, Jul. 21, 2– 5 p.m.
- Los Angeles River Revitalization Project — Restoration of a channelized river and its habitat in an urban environment.
  Sunday, Jul. 24, noon – 5 p.m.

At the conference venue, listen to a powerful speaker on a pressing topic: journalist Sam Quinones, author of “Dreamland: The True Tale of America’s Opioid Epidemic.” We’ll focus on county efforts to curb drug abuse are part of a luncheon discussion of the opioid crisis (Friday, July 22, noon – 2 p.m.).

Another pressing issue will be the focus of Next Generation NACo’s Community Service Project. Saving Innocence, a nonprofit working to end the sexual exploitation of children, has since its inception in 2010 Saving Innocence helped hundreds of children (Jul. 23, 9:30 – 10:30 a.m.).

Frequent travelers can take advantage of on-site TSA Pre-Check (click for requirements) with processing sponsored by U.S. Communities (Friday, July 22 through July 24, by appointment).

On the Long Beach Convention Center Promenade Plaza concourse, take a behind-the-scenes look at some of Los Angeles County’s largest specialized vehicles, from the Sheriff’s Department Mobile Command Post to the Natural History Museum’s Mobile Museum: An Ocean Experience (Friday, July 22, noon – 4 p.m.).

Finally, Saturday and Sunday morning early risers can begin the day with morning circuit fitness and cycling, respectively, on the Promenade Plaza (Saturday, July 23 and Sunday, July 24 at 6 a.m.).

I look forward to seeing you in Los Angeles County!

Compete to save your county money by improving your energy efficiency

Every year, the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) holds a nationwide competition between buildings to help governments and organizations save energy, save water and fight climate change with help from EPA’s ENERGY STAR and WaterSense programs. As part of the 2015 ENERGY STAR National Building Competition, Manatee County, Fla. reduced its energy usage by 7.3 percent saving them approximately $34,600 over the course of the year.

House GOP tax reform plan unclear on the future of municipal bonds

By Mike Belarmino
associate legislative director

House Speaker Paul Ryan (R-Wis.) and the House Republican Task Force on Tax Reform released a blueprint for tax reform June 24 as part of Ryan’s “A Better Way” campaign, which seeks to establish a clear and unified Republican agenda around six main policy areas: poverty, tax reform, health care, national security, federal regulations and constitutional authority.

Written as a blueprint rather than legislative language, the tax component reiterates the long-held Republican goal of lowering tax rates for individuals and businesses. The 35-page plan highlights several of House Republicans’ priorities for potential tax reform efforts in 2017. In particular, the top corporate tax rate would be lowered from 35 percent to 20 percent.

For individuals, the current seven tax brackets would be consolidated into three, with the top tax rate set at 33 percent. Additionally, the plan would repeal the alternative minimum tax, which limits the tax benefits of various deductions such as those for tax-exempt municipal bond interest and the estate tax.

To achieve a simpler tax code, the plan calls for the elimination of all itemized deductions except for the mortgage interest and the charitable contribution deductions. The deduction for state and local taxes — property, income and sales — would presumably be on the chopping block. The blueprint does not provide any specifics on the treatment of tax-exempt municipal bond interest.

Bonds are critical tools for counties. They have increasingly borne the cost of infrastructure and public improvements. Between 2003 and 2012, states and local governments financed $3.2 trillion in infrastructure investment through these bonds alone.

In general, the release of the House tax reform blueprint met with mixed reviews, even by Senate Republicans. Although intended to lay the groundwork for tax reform in 2017, the success of the plan will hinge on whether Republicans control the White House and Congress after the November elections.

NACo will continue to monitor developments but urges counties to keep explaining the importance of municipal bonds to members of their congressional delegations. Additionally, counties should urge their representatives to join the Congressional Municipal Finance Caucus led by Reps. Randy Hultgren (R-Ill.) and Dutch Ruppersberger (D-Md.).

NACo Second Vice President Candidate Statement

Greg Cox
Supervisor, San Diego County, Calif.

Live Well America!

For the better part of four decades, I have had the honor of serving in local government. Since 1995, I have had the privilege of representing the residents of San Diego County — a county that exemplifies much of the rich diversity found throughout our nation.

Having served as president of two statewide associations, including the California State Association of Counties, I was proud to serve on the NACo Board of Directors. I co-chaired NACo’s Governance and Structure Task Force to change the structure of the association to allow for more opportunities for members to get involved and have their voices heard.

No level of government across our nation is closer to the people than county government. The vast array of services our counties provide 365 days a year enhance our quality of life and far too often serve as a vital safety net.

Recently, I had the pleasure of unveiling a one-stop county service center that provides local residents with access to medical insurance coverage, food and nutrition assistance, child support, aging and independence services, and veterans’ benefits.

Creating easy access to resources like this is just the beginning of what we can do. I am proud to play a leading role in the delivery of so many critical services to residents in rural, suburban and urban areas. And I am ready and eager to take on a broader challenge: serving as an officer for the National Association of Counties.

Since I announced my candidacy for NACo 2nd vice president in January, I have often been asked what I want to accomplish as a NACo officer. Considering the complexity of county services — and the diversity of the people we serve — that’s not an easy question.

America’s counties are unique and each has its own distinctive challenges. But here are three areas that I want to focus on to ensure we have safe, healthy and vibrant communities. I call this “Live Well America!”

Expanding Collaborative Services in Our Communities

One challenge facing NACo is to examine ways for counties to leverage and make the most of services already in place. We cannot solely focus on seeking new fiscal resources out of Washington, D.C. We must also look for new ways to provide people with access to existing resources.

As counties, we need to enhance our collaboration with community groups and the private sector. For example, I have been a strong advocate of the 2-1-1 system that plays an invaluable role in connecting residents with local services. It also serves as a critical component in communicating information to the public during emergencies such as earthquakes, floods and fires.

I have personally witnessed this partnership come to life in recent years when San Diego County experienced a series of wildfires that resulted in mass evacuations and the destruction of nearly 5,000 homes. For many residents, 2-1-1 was their primary link for information and resources during all too frequent emergencies.

We need to see 2-1-1 expanded across all counties. This would be particularly helpful in rural communities that often face connectivity and other challenges that prevent access to services and resources.

The health of our residents is another issue we can never overlook. Many counties have already implemented programs for children that focus on nutrition and healthy living. The “Live Well San Diego” initiative has become a national model for creating healthy, safe communities. Led by the county, this visionary, strategic initiative features a broad coalition of partners including cities, schools, businesses and non-profit community providers.

By developing preventive public health and safety measures such as this, we can ultimately reduce the cost of county services down the road. Exploring cost-effective solutions is critically important in the face of underfunded federal mandates. More importantly, we will be helping to create a healthier population that benefits all of us. Collaborative efforts such as 2-1-1 can result in healthier communities and help us reach the goal of “Live Well America!”

Enhancing Economic Development throughout the Country

The importance of counties in economic development cannot be overstated. Whether it’s the urban core, the suburbs or a rural area, we must strive to create dynamic, sustainable communities. Needs may differ, but the goal is the same: Our residents want to live in communities where they can work, raise their families and thrive.

As a national association, we need to ensure that our county is investing in infrastructure and job creation, as well as visionary land-use planning and strong, regional cooperative efforts. Community, economic and workforce development are already key components of NACo’s American County Platform. Yet our job is far from done.

Too often it seems like we are fighting with the federal government to maintain funding for programs that enhance economic development — programs like Community Development Block Grants, Secure Rural Schools and Payment in Lieu of Taxes. Priorities such as affordable housing, infrastructure and job creation are often detailed by partisan politics. As NACo states, “economic vitality is crucial to the health of every community.” Only through the incorporation of strong, vibrant, comprehensive economic development in every county in this country, and only when we put policy over politics, will America be truly living well.

Elevating the Needs of Our Veterans

There are nearly 22 million veterans in the United States — making up about 7 percent of our nation’s population. Yet all too often they are an invisible population, despite the fact that they are the reason we enjoy the freedoms that we do.

Veterans’ services have been close to my heart for decades. My own County of San Diego has the third largest concentration of veterans in the country. I see these veterans every day — but too many times I see them in our mental health clinics or living on our streets.

Counties are often the bridge between federal programs and our veterans. But we can do more than just be a bridge.

Take a look at some startling statistics:

- Nearly 9 percent of our nation’s homeless population are veterans.
- Of the number of veterans who served in Afghanistan and Iraq, 20 percent are suffering from post-traumatic stress syndrome.
- It’s been reported that 30 percent of soldiers develop mental health problems within three to four months of returning home.

As counties and as a nation, we must do all we can to reduce these numbers. As a national association, we must elevate the discussion and promote action to increase resources for those who have defended our country. And as county leaders, we must do all we can to ensure our veterans efficiently receive the services they deserve.

Through my vast experience in local office, I understand our focus is often on local control. I deeply believe that it is critical for local government voices to be heard on the national level. Our strength in NACo is speaking with one voice. Counties work every day with governments, community groups and the private sector to make a difference in our communities, and I want to see that counties also make a very real difference in setting the national agenda.

I would be honored to have your support to represent our nation’s counties. I have the experience, the passion, the energy and the collaborative approach needed to get things done. Working together through NACo, we can speak with one voice to inspire all of us to, “Live Well America!”
Meet the Candidates

NACo Second Vice President Candidate Statement

Robert Steele
Commissioner, Cook County, Ill.

It is my distinct honor to be a candidate for 2nd vice president of the National Association of Counties (NACo).

I have a strong, 20-year history with NACo. I began attending the organization’s conferences as a volunteer, then as an elected official, and currently serve as a national Board member. I chose to join the organization more than two decades ago because I believe that NACo is a catalyst for change where government leaders can advocate, with a collective voice, on national policies, exchange ideas and build leadership skills, all while pursuing cost-effective solutions to running county enterprises.

I have always strived to make an impact within the organization, and one I am proudest of is serving as chairman of NACo’s 457 Deferred Compensation Plan task force. Since 2012, our pension fund has grown from $12.2 billion to $15.3 billion. I also took a leadership role in developing and implementing our organization’s Minority Inclusion Plan.

I currently serve on the NACo Financial Services Committee and am a delegate to the NACo U.S. Communities program. I have been a member of the NACo Next Gen Committee since its inception and currently am a champion for the NACo Stepping Up Program, advocating on behalf of mental health patients housed in county jails. I am also an advocate of the Property Accessed Clean Energy Program.

My goal, should I be elected as 2nd vice president of NACo, is to ensure that I represent and address the concerns and issues of our members. I will focus on enriching the public’s understanding of county government, and most importantly in my decision-making I will adhere to my personal motto, “be a part of the solution, not the problem.”

In terms of growing NACo’s membership, I am a proponent of educating municipalities across the country, as well as the business and private sector, on the accomplishments NACo has made on their behalf. I will be on the front lines to create awareness and educate others about the contributions of NACo, and that includes being in touch with our many regional organizations. I was pleased to recently attend our Western Interstate Region (WIR) Conference in Jackson Hole, Wyo., and have plans to visit other regional events leading up to our national conference. I particularly want to thank our regional organizations for extending these invitations.

Community is extremely important to me, and as such I am on the boards of the Third Gear Youth Leadership Fund, 100 Black Men of Chicago, Keep Chicago Beautiful and the Chicago Jobs Council. I also work with the Woodstock Institute’s Low Income Bank Lending Steering Committee, the Chicago Empowerment Zone, the Westside Association for Community Action, and I am the chairman of the North Lawndale Development Corporation and a member of the advisory board of Chicago Children’s Advisory Council for kids impacted by domestic violence. I have been honored to be the recipient of a number of awards including from the “Stepping Up Initiative” for my work in reducing unnecessary incarceration of the mentally ill. This year I received the Mayor Harold Washington Legacy Award presented by the Harold Washington Cultural Center and The James Major Adams Award presented at their 2016 Scholarship Gala.

Personally, I am a strong proponent of the Affordable Care Act. I am a kidney transplant recipient and an amputee from issues related to diabetes. I have fought to overcome each of these issues, and today live a strong, productive life, always working to give to others who are less fortunate. Today I serve on the boards of three local hospitals — Sinai Health System, Holy Cross and Schwab Rehabilitation Hospital. I also serve on the board of Gift of Hope Organ Transplant Organization.

My platform for our organization will encompass significant areas including:

- Clean Energy Policies
- ADA Compliance
- Economic Development (Urban and Rural)
- Mental Health intervention
- Health Care
- Education
- Restorative Justice

Key areas of focus for our organizations’ officers, executive committee and board of directors include:

- Developing economic policies that foster job creation across the country;
- Developing partnerships with law enforcement that stem the tide of violence in urban communities;
- Fostering reductions in energy consumption and helping counties reduce their overall environmental footprint;
- Growing the NACo membership and sphere of influence.

I would be honored to use my time, talent and treasure to further the growth of NACo, and I would welcome your support and vote as I seek this important office.

Leave your business card in the Media Room or email us at cnews@naco.org. We’ll be in touch.

Looking forward to hearing from you,

Bev, Charles, Charlie

P.S. We’d love to talk to you in person, too. Look for us at the conference.
Mandy Metzger
Vice Chair
Rural Action Caucus
Supervisor
Coconino County, Ariz.

Number of years active in NACo: 7

Years in public service: 7 years at county level; 6 years as legislative assistant, U.S. Senate

Occupation: Currently Coconino County supervisor; formerly land, resources and public policy consulting; formerly president of a nonprofit specific to 426,000 of private, state and federal lands

Education: University of Wyoming; various seminars and institutes including NACo’s County Leadership Institute

The hardest thing I’ve ever done: Quit smoking 25 years ago. It was the hardest and the best decision I have ever made.

Three people (living or dead) I’d invite to dinner: Thomas Jefferson, Bruce Springsteen, and Melinda Gates

A dream I have is to: Become an accomplished writer and artist.

You’d be surprised to learn that: 1. I met with Slobodan Milosevic, then president of Serbia, during the Bosnian War. It was under extremely stressful conditions. He showed me fragments from rockets or mortar embedded in the wall of the presidential offices.

The most adventurous thing I’ve ever done is: Airlifted medicines into war-torn areas.

I’m most proud of: My children.

My favorite meal is: As a rancher, it would have to include beef.

My pet peeve is: Over-use of acronyms.

My motto is: Live by example.

The last book I read was: The Sympathizer by Viet Thanh Nguyen.

My favorite movie is: I have so many “favorites” as I make it a point to go to the movies once a week. It is my “down” time.

My favorite music is: I love almost all music. Right now I am hooked on jazz.

My favorite U.S. president is: I could name several, but choose Abraham Lincoln. He came almost out of the blue and went on to preserve the Union during one of the most difficult and defining times in our Nation’s history. I admire his intellect, perseverance and courageous leadership. I also admire the ability to step away from the “box” and route a new course.

My county is a NACo member because: Coconino County has long been an active participant in NACo. We are confident in the benefits the organization delivers. NACo’s research is top notch. Its representation of county matters on Capitol Hill regularly garners compliments from national leaders. NACo’s ability to listen to its members discuss and debate critical issues, and then craft strategies and messages that are fair, responsive, and that also resonate with the agencies and congressional members, is exceptional.

From my perspective, allocating funds to participate in broad-based county networking and decision-making that impacts critical national policy decisions is a no-brainer. Counties are in a powerful position to bring solutions to policymakers. The more county elected leaders can participate in NACo, the stronger the organization will become.

Bottom line — the stronger and more persuasive NACo is, the better we are able to serve our constituents. NACo is a win-win proposition.

Senate passed parallel bill in March any new funding for mental health services, as that would have to come through the appropriations process. A provision that would have eased the Medicaid Institutions for Mental Diseases (IMD) exclusion, a 50-year-old policy that prevents Medicaid from covering mental health and residential care in facilities with more than 16 beds, was greatly scaled back. H.R. 2646 instead codifies a new regulation that applies only to Medicaid managed-care systems and covers stays in IMD facilities if they are less than 15 days.

The Senate has a parallel, bipartisan bill, the Mental Health Reform Act of 2016 (S. 2680), sponsored by Sens. Chris Murphy (D-Conn.) and Bill Cassidy (R-La.), which passed out of the Health, Education, Labor & Pensions (HELP) Committee in March.

At the time, Senate leadership indicated it would get a floor vote in September. It has faced an obstacle over gun politics, and Sen. John Cornyn (R-Texas) wants to combine a bill addressing involvement of law enforcement in mental health. However, the strong bipartisan showing of support in the House for H.R. 2646 could further encourage

Behind the Seal

Saratoga County, N.Y.

Introduced: 1972

Created by: Larry Gordon and John Stroll

Saratoga County’s seal was designed as part of a bicentennial flag. When the seal appears on the flag, it is circled by 13 stars, representing the 13 colonies.

In 1791, Saratoga County was formed from part of Albany County. The Hudson River borders the county on the north and east, and the Mohawk River forms the southern boundary.
Data can dramatically enhance county services, accountability

By Stephen Goldsmith
Harvard Kennedy School

Data and technology have nearly limitless potential to make local government more effective and responsive. The growing number of success stories across all levels of government means the value proposition for data has never been clearer.

Leading counties are already leveraging data for countless topics, ranging from public health to human services. County leaders should seek to deploy data for preempting and solving problems, changing accountability and enforcement, and improving customer service.

Preempting and Solving Problems
In order to provide top-tier service to communities, government needs to not only react to complaints and problems as they arise but also pre-empt them through the use of predictive analytics. Scientists in Harris County, Texas carefully track the population and distribution of mosquitoes by trapping and collecting samples throughout the county’s 268 zones. The gathered data enable officials to specifically monitor the few species that serve as vectors for viruses such as West Nile and Zika, and ultimately adopt strategic pesticide utilization. Through monitoring and targeted spraying, Harris County prevents accelerated mosquito resistance, saves public dollars and forests unnecessary environmental damage.

Changing Accountability and Enforcement
Regulatory efforts no longer need to rely on randomized or static lists that do not take risk into account. New data-driven strategies allow regulators to be far more efficient by ordering inspections in a data-informed way.

Montgomery County, Md. recently replicated Chicago’s successful algorithm to prioritize food inspections. The model analyzes open data on previous inspections, weather and characteristics of establishments to send inspectors to those establishments most likely to have violations first.

In the initial pilot, Montgomery County identified 27 percent more violations three days earlier, meaning fewer food-borne illnesses and a more effective inspections program.

Improving Customer Service
The cliché of government red tape exists for a reason — citizens attempting to receive services must sometimes endure cumbersome and repetitive processes. Allegheny County, Pa.’s Data Warehouse is a tool that allows the county to vastly improve service delivery to those with multiple needs. It integrates data from almost 30 sources, including school districts, mental health and child services.

This data-sharing and central repository of all data about each client translates to better case management and more effective service for clients. The extensive data also allows the county to analyze trends, measure the effectiveness of interventions and accurately track services.

Counties have finite resources to deliver a crucial set of services, a proposition that will become increasingly chal-
FAA finalizes rules for non-recreational drones

The Department of Transportation’s (DOT) Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) finalized rules, June 21, governing the use of small-unmanned aircraft systems (UAS) in the National Airspace System. The rules are set to take effect in August, 60 days after the rule was published in the Federal Register. The rules provide information to non-recreational operators about what is and is not appropriate to do. As the UAS industry continues to grow, these rules lay out important operational limitations for non-recreational users, including counties, as well as requirements for aircraft and UAS remote pilot certification.

In addition to a 55-pound weight limit, drones must remain in the visual line of sight of the operator, yield the right of way to other aircraft, carry no hazardous material, and cannot reach a ground speed over 100 miles per hour. However, operators will be able to fly below 400 feet and at least five miles from an airport without obtaining special permission, and may fly during twilight hours provided they show such flights are safe and the drone is fitted with anti-collision lights.

The FAA states that many of these rules are waivable through petition to the FAA and proof that the flight is not threatening. These waivers will be available soon on the FAA’s website so that operators can easily access them if they wish to fly outside of FAA regulations. If an applicant’s request is accepted, the FAA has the ability to require certain necessary adjustments to ensure drone safety.

Counties and other government entities have two options for flying unmanned aircraft: fly under the small UAS rule, including aircraft and pilot requirements, or obtain a blanket Certificate of Waiver of Authorization (COA), which allows for flights below 400 feet in Class G airspace and pilot self-certification.

While NACo does not have official policy specific to drones, we will continue to monitor developments related to unmanned aircraft systems and any impacts they might have for county governments.

NACo OFFICERS, COUNTY OFFICIALS

Broward County, Fla. Commissioner Chip LaMarca; Salt Lake County, Utah Mayor Ben McAdams; Robin Pfloehman, program manager, Community Resilience + Equity, King County, Wash. were among the featured panelists at the State of Resilience Leadership Forum and Community Workshop June 28–29.

The event, hosted by the ResilientAmerica Roundtable of the National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine, brought together federal agency leaders, local leaders and those with demonstrated resilience leadership from industry and nonprofit organizations to discuss effective efforts that enhance resilience.

NACo STAFF

- Jack Peterson has been promoted to associate legislative director in the NACo Legislative Department. In the new position, Peterson will staff the Human Services and Education Steering Committee. Previously, he served as a legislative assistant in the department.

- Linda Langston, director of strategic relations and past NACo president, was also a featured panelist at the State of Resilience Leadership Forum and Community Workshop, June 28–29.

- Matt Chase, executive director, and Andrew Goldschmidt, membership marketing director, represented NACo at the Florida Association of Counties Annual Conference and Educational Exposition June 28 – July 1 in Orange County, Fla.

- Sharon Russell, senior program manager, NACo FSC, testified at a public hearing in Easton, Md., hosted by Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan’s Commission to Modernize State Procurement.

85% in Airport Improvement Program (AIP) funding was received by county-supported airports in federal FY 2015.

51% of counties have veterans comprising more than 10 percent of the adult population.
‘Imperiled’ Historic Lodge Gets a New Lease on Life

PROBLEM: What to do with a decaying, 164-year-old historic building — one of the few remnants of when Crawford, Ala. was the Russell County seat.

SOLUTION: Rally local support, donated services and county resources to restore the building as a community center with a park.

By Charles Taylor
senior staff writer

The Tuckabatchee Masonic Lodge No. 96 was one of Alabama’s historic “places in peril.”

“Intervention is desperately needed to save this structure,” Alabama Heritage magazine wrote of the building in 2012. Built in 1848, it was covered in vines and showing signs of decay.

Fortunately for the building, 2012 was also the year Chance Corbett was elected to the Russell County Commission. He’s been widely hailed in the community as the driving force behind the restoration.

His vision was that an aging pre-Civil War building could become a center for community events next to a new county park.

That “vision” is now Crawford Park at The Historic Tuckabatchee Masonic Lodge, and it’s rarely seen an idle weekend since opened in May 2015. It wasn’t that long ago, Corbett said, that residents would sometimes call the county “to complain about it being a nuisance.”

The project is a best-in-class winner of a 2016 NACo Achievement Award for arts and historic preservation.

“This is the only thing I’ve ever done in my life that I haven’t had any negative comments on,” Corbett said. “This has been the best project. The public has just completely embraced it.”

But this was no one-man job, and he’s quick to share credit with the scores of community volunteers and fellow commissioners.

The renovation has turned the building into a revenue-producing asset for the county: Rentals, handled through the County Commission office, are $125 per event, and all rental income “goes right back into the project,” he said. The county has a long-term lease with the building’s owner, who, to date, has declined to accept any payment.

Upstairs, the second floor has been turned into a museum displaying freemasonry artifacts from the building’s past.

The park officially opened in January 2016 and provides something members of the Crawford community never had before — a park with a playground that’s close to home. Before, “If you got in the car and drove, the nearest park you would come to is 15 to 20 miles away,” Corbett explained.

Russell County contributed $15,000 to get the renovation going and $85,000 towards equipment for the playground. Beyond that, grants, donations and community sweat equity got the job done, he added.

A local sod company provided the grass for landscaping. A playground equipment company contributed towards the purchase of swings, slides and such. New trees came courtesy of an Alabama Power Foundation “Good Roots” grant. An electrical supply company donated and installed wiring. And additional funding came from the state and the Alabama Historic Commission.

Corbett said more $20,000 was raised from the sale of the commemorative brick pavers — many of which he installed — that now line the walkway to the building’s entrance.

An early arrival makes his way to the newly restored Tuckabatchee Masonic Lodge at Crawford Park for the ribbon-cutting ceremony on May 19, 2015. Photo by Chance Corbett

And there’s room for more. “Being an old masonic lodge, a lot of masons call me out of the blue and say, ‘I want to put a brick down for my dad or my granddad who used to go there.’ I’ve had masonic lodges all over the state of Alabama call and want to put a brick down.”

More recently, Corbett has been helping to pour concrete to anchor park benches that will be installed, but his contributions haven’t all been manual labor. He also keeps the park’s Facebook page up to date and has taken “every photograph” of the playground posted there.

Some residents have shared their thoughts about the project on the social media site. “I hope you are going [to NACo’s Annual Conference] to receive this award, Chance,” wrote Barbara Long — “you being the one who could imagine what this vine-covered old building could become and worked so hard to achieve this beautiful park. Great work.”

Barring the unexpected, Corbett says he plans to be there.
by the Municipal Securities Rulemaking Board

Financing a public project through municipal bonds is a team effort, as dozens of professionals work together to achieve the goals of the state or local government.

Each member of the deal team offers different skills and expertise, and has distinct responsibilities.

Many state and local governments choose to add a municipal advisor to this team to provide financial advice about the structure, pricing, timing and distribution of their bonds to investors. If your team includes one, make it a priority to get to know your municipal advisor.

Unlike underwriters, municipal advisors owe a federal fiduciary duty to their municipal or other interests. Municipal or other interests and accountable professionals provide advice that states and municipalities rely on when issuing bonds. If you are working with a regulated municipal advisor, there are three main ways you can be a more informed client:

- verify the municipal advisor’s registration and professional qualifications
- understand the conduct you should and should not expect from municipal advisors, and
- know how to report potential professional misconduct to the appropriate authorities.

As the MSRB’s new rules for municipal advisors begin to go into effect this year, state and local governments may see changes in their relationships with the professionals they hire for their deal team. Ultimately, the rules aim to ensure that only appropriately qualified and accountable professionals provide advice that states and municipalities rely on when issuing bonds. If you are working with a regulated municipal advisor, there are three main ways you can be a more informed client:

- verify the municipal advisor’s registration and professional qualifications
- understand the conduct you should and should not expect from municipal advisors, and
- know how to report potential professional misconduct to the appropriate authorities.

Verify Municipal Advisor Registration and Qualifications

Before working with a municipal advisor, issuers should verify that the firm is properly registered with both the Securities and Exchange Commission and the MSRB. See a list of all registered municipal advisor firms on the MSRB’s website by clicking the “Working with Regulated Financial Professionals” link on the MSRB.org homepage.

Municipal advisor professionals are required to take a professional qualifying examination. By fall 2017, every municipal advisor professional is expected to have taken and passed the MSRB’s Series 50 qualifying exam in order to continue providing municipal advisory services. The MSRB will publish the names of individuals who pass the exam on its website at MSRB.org.

What to Expect from Your Municipal Advisor

At the beginning of the municipal advisory relationship, municipal advisors must provide written documentation of the relationship to the client. They must disclose, in writing, any conflicts of interests that could potentially affect the advice they provide to the client. Under the federal fiduciary duty, they must put the interests of their clients ahead of their own. Municipal advisors also are required to “know their clients” and only make recommendations that are suitable based on the client’s financial situation, objectives, risk tolerance and experience with the product or transaction, among other factors.

MSRB rules also identify certain prohibited conduct that municipal advisors must not engage in. Municipal advisors may not charge excessive compensation or fees for their services. To address the potential for conflicts of interest in the selection process, the MSRB has capped the value of gifts that municipal advisors are permitted to give to an employee of an issuer client.

The MSRB is also implementing rules that prohibit so-called “pay-to-play” activities connected with political contributions to officials of municipal entities with decision-making authority over hiring municipal advisors. Additionally, municipal advisors are prohibited from engaging in principal transactions, such as sales or purchases of any security or entrance into any derivative, guaranteed investment contract or other similar financial product, with its municipal entity client for which the municipal advisor provided advice, except for in limited cases. This ensures that advisors do not steer clients into a related transaction that financially benefits the municipal advisor’s firm.

More information on the MSRB rules containing these obligations and prohibitions is available on the MSRB’s website at MSRB.org.

FILE A COMPLAINT

Any issuer or municipal market participant who suspects a municipal advisor of violating MSRB rules or acting unfairly should report it to the regulatory authorities. The MSRB accepts complaints by phone at 202.838.1330 or by email to complaints@msrb.org.

ON-DEMAND WEBINAR

For more information on what to expect from your municipal advisor, view an on-demand webinar detailing the requirements, rules and regulatory protections in place for clients of municipal advisors.

Continuing professional education credit is available for webinar participants. (A link to the webinar is available in the online edition of County News)

Tulare County, Calif.

New Member County Fun Facts:
In 1906, Tulare County was home to the only town in California that was founded, financed, built, populated and governed by African Americans. Allensworth consisted originally of 20 acres near Tulare Lake, and was a very prosperous agricultural town for almost a decade. The loss of the natural water supply in the area, the death of their founding member and the relocation of the Santa Fe Railroad all contributed to the decline of the community. Today Allensworth is a state park with some of the town’s building restored and open to the public.

GET TO KNOW...
Affirmation and Recognition

He saw that I was busy reading a document very carefully. That was what I was focused on. That was what I had been focusing on for at least 10 minutes. Yet he came over to my desk and politely at first, but more insistently later on when I initially didn’t respond, asked if I could spend a few moments with him.

The HR Doctor learned a long ago as a “servant-leader” that the best way to help ensure successful administration and successful relationships is to pay attention to behavioral cues occurring right in front of you. I stopped reading and realized how important it was to build on our close relationship going on for over two years. He wanted to tell me something that was important to him, and, therefore, important to me.

In this case the message was that he had to go out to pee. He couldn’t do that unless I opened the door and let him out. Canis Majoris (aka “Major”) is my amazingly handsome three-year-old yellow lab canine. He is gentle and great fun to be with — unless you happen to be a snake or a gopher. He wants very much to please and doesn’t want to annoy. He wanted to convey an important message this morning, and it turned out to be in my very best interest to pay attention to him, despite my reading. I am glad I appreciated the urgency of what he was trying to tell me.

Major and my other beautiful dog, Isibindi, a Rhodesian Ridgeback mix, spend a lot of time communicating with each other and with me. They wrestle with each other, ambush each other, run at near warp speed all over our property and diligently serve as chiefs of security and greeters of our guests.

Their behavior with me has one common feature every bit as important in public administration and supervisor-subordinate relationships as it is with the training and care of four-legged friends. It is the importance of learning to understand and pay attention to what is being said whether the message is being delivered in clear, understandable language or by means of nudges, barks, scratches or whines. The common questions asked regularly by my canine companions and by my friends and colleagues at work are: “How am I doing?” “Am I doing okay?” “Am I doing what needs to be done successfully?”

When Isibindi races out the front door and runs 500 feet to our front gate to bring me the morning paper, he comes in with tail wagging and eyes bright. As he stands in front of me looking hopeful, he is practically assuring me that he’s already read it and that I needn’t bother since it will contain nothing of interest to me. He is also saying, “Please tell me that I did just as you wanted me to, didn’t I?” “Have I earned continued affection and a treat?”

With respect to human work colleagues, and, in fact, all of us (including kids, spouses and significant others) requests and hopes for affirmation are very important to us. The “treats” are not primarily food pellets, although donuts can be very effective as forms of recognition.

In a bureaucracy, the formal tool is the performance evaluation. Isn’t the purpose of the evaluation to answer those basic questions of “How am I doing?” Isn’t the purpose of an evaluation to encourage continued great performance and behavior? Isn’t it also to praise and recognize excellence, and to document needed improvement?

While understanding the great importance attached to paying attention to and encouraging our fellow creatures, it is very hard to understand why many supervisors lose consciousness when it comes to the value of evaluations. Meeting the needs and hopes of subordinates at work is not helped at all when we don’t devote the time and attention to the need for affirmation. If we really cared about our performance evaluation processes would we not stop using “check the box” forms which may not be clearly job-related?

These same people suffer from a serious problem when it comes to using a calendar. They don’t seem able to make a personal commitment to being on-time in the evaluation process. Some supervisors, knowing full well that a person’s service anniversary date is tomorrow, may delay for weeks or months before carrying out a performance box-checking on an outdated form.

That type of supervisor doesn’t appreciate her role as a coach and developer of the skills and attitudes of others. Unfortunate and disrespectful delays may then be followed by a three-minute meeting with the person being evaluated. The script may be as sad as saying “This is your evaluation, sign here.” There is no real coaching, discussion of strengths and areas for improvement and only limited recognition of the person’s contributions. Rising-star employees working for this kind of supervisor will switch employers as soon as they can. This is a classic form of bureaucratic malpractice and yet it need not be that way.

“Check the box” forms, known more formally as “trait-based evaluations,” may even attempt to place a numerical value on a human being — maybe even to a decimal place value. The HR Doctor’s more favorite model — more job-related and more valuable — can also meet our bureaucratic craving for documentation. It is a “behavioral evaluation.” It asks the rater to respond directly to job-related questions about the employee’s behavior and performance. The rater then proceeds to answer the questions focusing on the employee being rated. Responses are likely to be short-answer narratives citing actual examples. Examples can include: How well has this colleague completed projects in a timely manner with proper attention to benchmarks and progress along the way? How well has this colleague kept supervisors informed of project progress and problems so that there are no unfortunate surprises? How respectful has this person been to members of the public, clients and colleagues?

How well has this colleague worked in our diverse workforce understanding and recognizing the need for proper conduct at work? How has the employee adhered to organizational policies?

How well has this employee served as a teacher or role model for other employees? How well has this employee supported agency goals and policies? Has the employee made constructive and innovative suggestions to improve processes?

These are only a few examples of behavioral questions that can link directly to job descriptions and provide much more meaningful feedback than giving a person a score of 3.2 on the trait of “appearance” or “initiative.”

If Canis Majoris had not persistently communicated his needs earlier today, I probably would have had a significant mess to clean up. Instead, by carefully listening to the cues he was giving me, by appreciating their importance and by giving him timely praise and recognition, I got to pet him, shake hands with him, let him out and enjoy a moment of watching him fly around the property before settling in to the all-important “perfect” spot.

Recognizing the vast differences between proper human resources in relation to human colleagues at work and trying to be a good steward of care for my amazing dogs, I would argue nonetheless that affirmation and recognition are critically important regardless of species.

SANTA CRUZ County Superior Court Judge Thomas Fink has begun rejecting prison-only plea deals in drug cases that stem from federal-or-origin charges and wind up in county courts.

In one recent case, he said, “The court does not want its hands tied in connection with sentencing in this matter.” Fink said, adding that because the U.S. Attorney’s Office declined what is essentially a federal case, he would reject the sentencing provision of the plea, the Nogales International reported.

Fink has previously said that up to 50 percent of the cases at Santa Cruz County Superior Court “are federal cases and should not be in our courts.”

CALIFORNIA
ORANGE COUNTY voters overwhelmingly approved the creation of what local officials say is the first county-based ethics commission in the state. By a vote of 70 percent to 30 percent, voters backed Measure A to form a County Campaign Finance and Ethics Commission.

The commission will have jurisdiction over campaign finance laws, financial conflicts of interest, lobbyist regulations, the county’s gift ban and other county ethics rules. The commission is legally bound to respond to citizen complaints. It can also impose fines on politicians of three times the amount of money illegally spent or illegally received.

FLORIDA
Gov. Rick Scott (R) declared a state of emergency in MARTIN and ST. LUCIE COUNTIES because of widespread algae blooms that have fouled the St. Lucie River and area beaches.

The declaration allows local government agencies to redirect the flow of water in and out of Lake Okeechobee. Lakes north of Lake Okeechobee will hold back about 20 billion gallons of water that otherwise would flow into the lake, and subsequently, into the river.

Blue-green algae blooms have taken a toll on water-related businesses, harmed the river’s ecology and could cause health problems for people who come in contact with the water, according to the Treasure Coast Palm.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers regulates when and how much water is released from the lake.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention has awarded $10 million to Rush University and COOK COUNTY Health and Hospitals System (CCHHS) to fund continuing research into drug-resistant germs, so-called “superbugs.”

CDC officials highlighted Rush and CCHHS’ success in reducing the spread of certain drug-resistant intestinal bacteria by using a cleaning protocol they developed. It cut the number of such infections by more than 50 percent in hospitals where it was tested, according to CCHHS.

The CDC estimates that antibiotic resistance causes 2 million serious infections and 23,000 deaths annually.

Thanks to a $325,000 federal grant, LAKE COUNTY will be able to treat twice as many people through its medication-assisted treatment program for people addicted to heroin or prescription opioid drugs.

The county’s substance abuse program in Waukegan, the county seat, has been designated a Federally Qualified Health Center allowing it to add counselors, a clinical social worker and to prescribe methadone, buprenorphine and other medications that help with withdrawal symptoms and cravings.

Each of BALTIMORE COUNTY Police Department’s 10 police precincts now has a body-worn camera in the first phase of the program’s rollout, county and police officials announced recently. The department will train 10 officers per week for 15 weeks until 150 cameras are in use.

By December of next year, 1,400 of the county’s 1,900 police officers will be outfitted with cameras.

An eight-year, $12.5 million contract with a vendor covers the cost of purchasing cameras, maintenance, unlimited data storage, licenses and other expenses. These costs will be paid with revenue from the county’s speed-camera program.

When fully implemented in FY19, the ongoing annual maintenance cost of the cameras will be an estimated $1.6 million.

NEW JERSEY
While much of the focus on Great Britain’s “Brexit” vote to leave the European Union was on the United Kingdom’s economic future, part of one of England’s former colonies, who left 240 years prior, benefitted a little.

BERNALILLO COUNTY will save close to $400,000 over eight years after refinancing a bond, thanks to a sudden demand for bonds during a stock market plunge following the Brexit vote, NJ.com reported.

NEW MEXICO
Travel for any BERNALILLO COUNTY commissioners costing more than $3,500 may be subject to a public vote, plus Additional disclosures, under a new policy under consideration.

The policy would require reporting of the reasons why a commissioner’s trip is necessary at least two weeks before the travel takes place and requires disclosure when an outside source pays for a commissioner’s travel, KRQE News reported.

Every dog warden in Clark County now has his or her eight-hour day.

The County Commission agreed to make wardens full-time county employees as of July 1.

The wardens were previously employed by both the county and the Clark County Humane Society, but once wardens were dispatched to situations, including unruly dogs and possible dog bites independent of sheriff’s deputies, the county began to take more responsibility for their safety, according to the Springfield News-Sun.

- A recall effort against the Harney County judge who opposed wildlife refuge occupier Ammon Bundy failed, with nearly 70 percent voting to keep Steve Grasty in office.

Grasty barred Bundy from using a county fairgrounds building after armed militia appeared with Bundy at another community meeting.

- Marion County commissioners approved a plan for the county’s garbage incinerator to accept more out-of-state medical waste from Washington and California.

That additional load, up to 50 million pounds per year, could be worth $3.4 million for the county, which had seen a decline in incinerator revenue, according to the Statesman Journal.

Travis County and Austin will partner to manage a sobriety center, scheduled to open in 2017.

The governments will form a nine-member board to head a local government corporation to manage the center, which will staff 27 people to tend to 30 to 40 people picked up for public intoxication.

The Austin American Statesman reported the county would donate the medical examiner’s building, which is scheduled to be vacated soon.

Santa Fe County and the City of Santa Fe have created a regional Santa Fe Film Office to promote film, television and digital media production and related activities.

The office will be housed by the county.

The office will manage the continued growth of film and television productions; expand, grow and unify existing support services; support local filmmakers; develop new markets in emerging media; explore educational, employment and local business engagement opportunities; and recruit related enterprises.

- Launchpads have landed at Fauquier County public libraries. They’re pre-loaded learning tablets that pre-school through middle school kids can check out from any of three branches.

The tablets come loaded with at least 10 ad-free applications grouped by subject area, theme, grade level and age. Each library branch has 13-15 devices available for a 21-day checkout.

- Friends of the Fauquier Library bought the launchpads with a grant from the Korlandt Fund to create a digital literacy lab, according to The Free Lance-Star.

- Congratulations to Henrico County’s government television channel (HCTV) on snagging an Emmy award for the program Ringing the Bell: Police and Fire Chaplains of Henrico County.

- The program won the award in the religion – news single story/news series category. The 17-minute show highlights the volunteer ministers who provide pastoral care and spiritual support to Henrico’s first responders and residents.

- It was producer-director Gene Byard’s first Emmy and the sixth for Henrico’s media relations office since 2003. HCTV programs can be viewed online at henrico.us/pr.

Dane County supervisors passed an ordinance banning hired security guards from wearing uniforms or badges that resemble those of the sheriff’s office.

The department received complaints of former deputies wearing their uniforms while working security at local events, The Star reported. County deputies purchase their own uniforms and do not have to surrender them when they leave the department.

The new ordinance prohibits both wearing of actual Dane County Sheriff’s uniforms and badges or anything that would give the impression that security employees are sworn Dane County Sheriff’s deputies.
