Understanding and Implementing the Human Services Value Curve

Developed at Harvard University, the Human Services Value Curve is a framework that enables leaders, including those involved in local human services programs, to envision and create a path that will lead to improved outcomes for their organizations and the people they serve. NACo's Human Services and Education Steering Committee began discussing the Human Services Value Curve and its potential to transform county human services departments at the NACo's 2015 Annual Conference. At this session, we will recap and continue that conversation, providing an overview of the Human Services Value Curve and examples of how this emerging concept has been implemented in counties across the nation.

Moderator:

- Dr. Antonio Oftelie, Executive Director, Leadership for a Networked World, Harvard University

Presenters:

- Hon. Shirlee Zane, Supervisor, Sonoma County, Calif.
- Ms. Uma Ahluwalia, Director, Department of Health and Human Services, Montgomery County, Md.
- Mr. Jon Rubin, Director, Department of Human Services, Bucks County, Pa.
- Ms. Megan Lape, Director, National Collaborative for Integration of Health and Human Services, American Public Human Services Association

Interim Policy Resolutions

The committee will address two interim policy resolutions and vote on whether they should be added to NACo's policy platform until the annual conference in July.
